SPEAKERS

Bob Franco is an ecological and demographic anthropologist whose research focuses on contemporary Hawaiian, Samoan, and Pacific Islander sociocultural issues. He oversees quantitative studies of student engagement, learning and achievement, specifically degree completion and transfer. He is also a champion of several national initiatives in science education and civic responsibility.

Reynold Hioki is a cybersecurity coordinator for the State of Hawai‘i. His certifications and professional affiliations allow him to integrate and promote Hawai‘i’s cyber safety awareness efforts. Prior to his current position, he served concurrently as the State Department of Defense Chief information Officer, Hawai‘i National Guard Director of C4 (J6), and Hawai‘i Air National Guard Director of Communications and Information Systems (A6).

John Clark is an author, lifelong surfer, former lifeguard and retired Honolulu Fire Department Deputy Fire Chief. As narrator of the film, Clark identifies six surf sports that were practiced by Native Hawaiians, including action shots of each. He also identifies the Hawaiian names of the famous surf spots in Waikīkī that today are only recognized by their English names.
